wagons, carriages and carts and workmen afoot, came to each end of the bridge, and rapidly the blockade began. Not only was the bridge loaded with blocked traffic, but the belated trains and vehicles formed a compact body for a long distance on each end of the bridge. A report became cur-rent that the draw would probably not be closed until the afternoon, and all looked about for some other method for continuing the journey. The electric cars on the Vir-ginia end of the bridge were placed at the service of passengers of southern trains. and many of them were run into the city via the Aqueduct bridge. Some of the later trains of this road were filled with southern passengers, but these, after being moved about on the tracks, were finally returned to the Long bridge and went over it after the southern trains from which they had received passengers had come into

All the passengers expected to arrive in this city early this morning, and no preparations had been made to give them breakfast, so that they had to fast until their arrival here. Let us hope that before the end of the twentieth century there will be no large standing armies; let us hope that the differences of men will be settled by arbitration, according to justice, and let us hope further that the differences of creed will be overlooked and that men will join hands in Christian unity and cease warring with one another in God's name."

Interruption This Morning of Traffic Over the Long Bridge.

MACHINERY FAILS TO CLOSE THE DRAW

Hundreds of People Detained on

Both Sides of River. MARKET PEOPLE INCLUDED

For about four hours this morning traffic over the Long bridge was interrupted, the trains to and from the south, electric cars, trucks, wagons and other vehicles coming in to market, laborers on their way to work and hundreds of people coming to this city from various points being delayed. On each end of the bridge there was an enormous aggregation of vehicles and humanity. The stoppage of traffic was caused by a cog wheel in the draw becoming checked while the latter was open. The machinery to close it could not be operated and only after a tug was set to pulling at a line on one end and a locomotive on the other end of the draw could it be closed and traffic resumed. Workmen then went to work vigorously in order to put the draw in condition so that it might be operated as soon as possible and prevent the stoppage of gine could not move it. It was after 5 o'clock and approaching the time of day when the greatest traffic goes over the bridge. Machinists were sent for and ar-rived on the scene of trouble about 6 o'clock, but they were powerless to put in order the checked cogwheel within any reasonable time and other methods were adopted. A steam tug and a locomotive were called into use, as stated, and hawsers were run from the end of the draw on the Virginia side to the tug and from the end on the Washington side to the loopmotive. By #:10 o clock they had succeed-ed in closing the draw and bringing the tie-up to a close. The machinists were then reinforced by as many men as could, be set to work to repair the machinery.
